Weekly Art Invasions

Each Wednesday, from 5 to 6 PM, I invited students to meet me at UNE’s Compass Rose in front of the library, where I presented them with a creative challenge.

The first week's task was to gather up Adirondack chairs from around campus and create a sculpture with them.
On another occasion they were charged with creating an art installation out of acorns they’d gathered. On another week, they did a flash mob in the cafeteria during dinner hour. Each week a different mix of students would come together, work collaboratively and solve whatever challenge I would present.
Most often we would leave the ‘art’ in place for others to discover.
